Mr. Taft also asserted that an appointive judiciary is far better than an elective one.

"The people are not competent to select their Judges," asserted Mr. Taft. In saying that I don't reflect on their intelligence, but it requires investigation to pick good Judges and the people are not able to make this investigation. A man whose name begins with "A' or a lawyer in a sensational lawsuit has a great advantage over men much better equipped to be Judges but who don't get the publicity. The general primary method of selecting Judges is absurd."

Mr. Taft does not believe in giving the Court of Appeals or the Chief Judge any power to name Judges, but he does believe in giving to the Chief Judge the power of designating Judges to fill vacancies. This would be in line

"The important part of the jury system is that the people feel they have a part in the administration of criminal justice," said Mr. Taft. "Also you have ing this State the danger of trial by newspapers, which is one of the dangers of the present system, and you need a unanimous verdict to resist the atmosphere created by the newspapers."

Something should be done to secure the trial of criminal cases without this newspaper trial by some modification of the free press, former President Taft thought.

Mr. Taft asserted that he favored sholishing the present rule protecting persons accused of crime which prohibits their being forced to testify.
